

PUBLIC RELATIONS KNOWLEDGE EXAM: YOUR ENTRY TO PRACTICE

Recent public relations and communications graduates and current junior-level practitioners will soon have the opportunity to demonstrate their skills, in written form. The CPRS National Council on Education is in the process of developing the first-ever standardized public relations exam in Canada. The Public Relations Knowledge™ \(PRK\) exam will be available in classrooms across the country this spring.

Companies that receive a high number of job applications have indicated they look for more reliable methods of assessing prospective and newly hired employees. After successfully completing the PRK exam, individuals will be able to set themselves apart from other applicants with this resumé builder. They will be able to enter the job market with increased confidence and be received with added respect.

“Had the PRK exam been available to me when I was a student, I think that I would have taken it,” said Geoff Koehler, 2010 public relations graduate, Public Affairs Associate, University Health Network, Toronto. “This would have been another element that I could speak about in the hiring process... it’s a testament to the experience and skill sets I possess,” added Koehler.

Public Relations Knowledge™ Exam Testimonial

Click here to view testimonial video

Completing the PRK exam will show potential employers that new graduates are well prepared to fill positions within the PR and communications industry. The exam also gives students the opportunity to promote and market themselves similar to other Entry-to-Practice exams. Regulated occupations such as engineering, teaching, law, physiotherapy and nursing use Entry-to-Practice exams as a way for individuals to identify themselves as highly knowledgeable in their field. Outcomes of exams are often a topic of conversation among peers.

The exam will cover an array of public relations and communications management topics in several different formats. Proposed topics for the exam include: public relations history, theory, ethics, fundamentals, case study analysis and a scenario-based writing exercise.

(more)

Canadian Public Relations Society
Advancing Public Relations &
Communications Management

Société canadienne
des relations publiques
Pour une gestion optimisée des relations publiques et des communications

“The efforts made by the CPRS National Council on Education to help advance the profession can be credited to all the dedicated volunteers,” said Pierrette Leonard APR, FCPRS, National President, CPRS. “Volunteers in the academic and professional public relations communities have worked hard, and continue to work hard, to provide an exceptional opportunity for new public relations graduates,” concluded Leonard.